MISS HOPPER IN VAUDEVILLE SKIT

Edna Wallace Crosses Bridge and Begins Engagement That Will Pay Her $1,500 a Week, or Over a Dollar a Minute.

First, there was "Alfons, Europe's treatest Equilibrist;" then. "Swan and Eccentric Comedy Recruits; et, but not nit, Frank Gardiner and Lottle Vincent in "An Idyl of the lanks;" Miss Sabel Johnson, "the world's highest soprano;" and finally, dna Wallace Hopper, who might have rean't) as the world's highest-priced raudeville actress. Flags were not flying, and villagers vere not clustered on Brooklyn corners excitedly announcing that the small and dainty Hopper was taking the first step in her $1,500 a week vaudeville career (Vive la vaudeville!) But, though the Brooklyn Bridge stood and trembled not, and transfers were tenlered to every part of Manhattan's Adopted, such was the case.

Edna Wallace—like the Tiger—had ressed the bridge—and was giving vau leville its most expensive jolt since ssle Lartlett Davis (if we correctly nember our vaudeville catechism). She tripped forward at a dollar-ornore-a-minute gait in "The March of lime." laid out by Cosmo Gordon Lenox, who was best-man at "The Marriage of Kitty."

Hyde and Behman were putting up the fifteen hundred, but of course Miss Wallace (or Mrs. Hopper) couldn't possibly need the money, in view of what she expects to reap from her late step-papa's estate in California. We had read the ravings of Her Headlinership anent "The March of Headlinership anent "The March of Time," and though possibly not entering wholly into her naive enthusiasm, we were ready to agree that in this case time was money, and mighty swod money at that.

Miss Wallace was white and winsome. She acted caintily and sang something about "Maudie" or somebody sonated an Egyptian lady a thousand brilliant. She was quite in the part, for it contained references to "suntinted, hair" and graceful waist-lines which must at least have fitted her vanity.

which must at least have fitted her vanity.
Supporting her was H. Hassard short, with his English accent and his waistooat flaring at the southern extremity; and Lila Vane, who impersonated an Egyptian lady a thousand or more years old.

In a seene, colored with the bright red blood of murder and suicide Miss Vane performed a vivid bit of acting which appealed most strongly to the Hyde and Schmanish clientie, and almost turned the glory of the "headine" into gray twilight. But, then, al,500 per is a lot of money and there was no forgetting that Edna Wallace Hopper was the money!
